ENVOYS OF THE PEOPLE.

They Have a Memorial for the President-Visitors at Sagamore.

[ST TELEGRAPH TO THE TRIBUXE.] Oyster Bay, N. Y., Aug. 3.—The Rev. P. K. Youn and Syngman Rhee, special envoys from the Corean people to the President of the United States, are in Oyster Bay to-night awaiting an audience with Mr. Roosevelt. They bear a memorial which they are jealously guarding, and expect to lay it before the President to-

"We wish it distinctly understood that we are not representatives of the Emperor," said Mr. Yoon, the spokesman, "for our Emperor does not now represent the best interests of the people of Corea. There has been a wonderful awakening in Corea within the last few years, but it has all taken place among the lower classes. The officials are tainted with the influence of Russia. A great society with many thousands of members is growing rapidly throughout the empire, and one of these days will take hold of affairs and conduct the government. The name of this society is Il Chin Hoj, which, translated, means 'The Daily Progress.' As the representatives of this great society we have been delegated to call on the President and lay a memorial at his feet. The people of Corea want the friendship of the American people and the American government. Th American government was the first power to make a treaty with the Corean government, and that treaty, made in 1880, still stands. The Corean people feel that unless the American government continues to be their friend the Rusrians and the Japanese will grind them to pieces like grain between the millstones. If the American President will use his good offices our imperiiled territory will be saved and we will be able to continue on the upward path of prog-

In further conversation Mr. Youn declared that the protectorate exercised over Cores by Japan was obtained by trickery through an in orrect translation of the language of the orig inal treaty. Still, as between the Japanese and the Russians, they would have little hesitancy in choosing the former for masters

"The Russians have ever been the enemies of our people," said Mr. Yoon. "They stand for everything that is hateful and deceitful, and we rejoice that the Japanese are winning in this

Acting Secretary Barnes received the Corear envoys late this afternoon and promised to try to arrange an appointment for them with the President. They neglected to write for such an appointment before coming to Oyster Bay, and when they arrived this afternoon it was impossible to send them to Sagamore Hill, for the President was engaged with a large party of invited guests. Mr. Barnes said that he believed it likely that the President would receive them o-morrow morning before the arrival of Count Witte and the Russian Ambassador, who are due early in the afternoon.

The President received a number of important callers to-day, including Sir Henry Mortimer Durand, the British Ambassador; Lieutenant Commander W. Sims, of the navy; Judge W. J. Calhoun, the special commissioner to Venezuela; W. W. Russell, the new Minister to Venezuela, William Seymour Edwards, a distant connec tion of the Roosevelt family, and Alvin H. Sanders, of Chicago, chairman of the reciprocity convention which is to meet in Chicago the latter

Ambassador Durand assured the newspaper Ambassador Durand assured the newspaper men that his coming had nothing whatever to do with the pending peace negotiations. He had merely run down from Lenox to see the President on a matter that could be discussed personally better than by letter. Mesers, Calhoun and Russell came to talk with the President about Venezueian problems before starting on their journey to South America, and the rest of the callers were on social missions.

President Roosevelt will receive M. Witte, the rincipal envoy of the Emperor of Russia to be Washington peace conference, informally o-morrow. Baron Rosen, the Russian Ambassa-norrow. Baron Rosen, will accompany M. for and associate envoy, will accompany M. Witte to Oyster Bay. They will be guests of the President and Mrs. Roosevelt at luncheon.
They will arrive on the 12:20 train and will probably leave here at 4:20.

Criticises "Whitewashing" of Professor by Pennsylvania University.

J. Dyneley Prince, professor of Assyriology in Provost C. C. Harrison, of the University of Pennexivania, in response to the report of the committee of inquiry of trustees, concerning Professor Hilprecht's alleged inaccuracies in his work "Explorations in Bible Lands." The letter reads

After carefully examining the report submitted to the trustees of the University of Pennsylvania by the committee appointed by them to investigate the charges brought against Professor Hilprecht, I seel bound to inform you that my opinion as to Professor Hilprecht's statements in his work. "Explorations in Bible Lands." regarding the three purchased tablets mentioned itherein, is unaltered. Dr. Hilprecht's implication that the tablets in question formed part of the discoveries and not of the purchases of the expedition is unmistakable, and I venture to think that both the scientific and the general cultivated reading public cannot fall to hold this view.

Your committee brings forward as an excuse for the misleading remarks about these three documents that Professor Hilprecht, in a popular work, such as his "Explorations in Bible Lands." was not writing a strictly scientific treatise which required "precision of statement," but points out that the work in question was issued in order to present the subject "in systematic but popular form."

Permit me, Mr. Provost, to express my convicpresent the subject "in systematic but popular, form."

Fermit me. Mr. Provost to express my conviction that every work, popular or otherwise, which pretends to deal with a scientific subject is bound to show complete "precision of statement," and I am amazed that your committee has seen it to take refuge in such an exceedingly transparent and questionable excuse.

A popular work need not of course, present all the technicalities of the subject under discussion, but in a case of this kind, where the exact description of the source was imperative. I cannot see how a conscientious scholar could avoid distinguishing between the material acquired by purchase and that which had been excavated. Yet this distinction Professor Hilprochi has decidedly falled to make an omission which no amount of whitewashing on the part of his profectors can succeed in disguishing as to Professor Hilprocht's whitewashing on the part of his protectors can succeed in disguising.

I make no inferences as to Professor Hilprecht's motives, leaving the weighing of these to that part of the unbiassed public which is bound to take at interest in "precision of statement" in every work assuming to be a popular exposition of scientific recessreh.

Thomas A. Edison Solves Problem of Electric Propulsion of Vehicles.

Orange, N. J., Aug. 3 (Special).-In announcing this afternoon that he had solved the problem of the electric propulsion of vehicles. Thomas A Edi-son, the inventor, discredited recent extravagant assertions attributed to him concerning his electric storage battery, which he says he fected. Mr. Edison announced that within a few weeks work would be started on an immense fac-tory building in Lakeside-ave., in which employment will be given to several hundred persons who will manufacture the battery. The building will be 600 feet long, 60 feet wide and three stories high Mr. Edison said that the statement that his battery would drive an automobile at the rate of thirty-three miles an hour from New-York to Philadelphia and back on a single charge of the battery was untrue. What he did say, though, was that a pleasure vehicle, under most favorable enditions, such as would hardly be met with in every day practice, might run at the rate of twenty miles an hour for one hundred and fifty niles with his battery. The best he would guarantee on a single charge was one hundred miles.

The troubles in the battery I have been trying for two years to remedy have been purely mechan-"They have been greatly due to the swelling of the nickel cement. I have succeeded in reducing the weight of the battery down to from forty to forty-five pounds per hersepower. It has taken time to find out what was needed for this battery, because we can't look ahead and see just what a thing is going to do after we have it sketched on paper. In the two years I have been experimenting we have turned some 14,000 cells of the battery and have operated 160 vehicles.

I do not pretend to have solved the problem for ouring vehicles. That can only be possible when nore charging stations are spread about the cour Cooper Hewitt of New-York, has helped object that problem with his mercury rectifier, which also the place of the old transformer, and makes possible to convert the alternating currents used a small towns so as to make them available for harging the batteries.

MI. Edison said one of the hardest things he had had to contend with was the consequences of the lark of knowledge of those who used the batteries, or, rather, misused them in practice, but he added that that was 'part of the game,' and he had overcome the trouble to a large degree. Under the best conditions, he said, it took five hours to charge the battery, though if economy was no object the charging could be done in less time.

The inventor has worked with his battery with the object of applying it to trucks for commercial purposes, and he says he can drive a two-ton hour if necessary.

PROMOTER MUST PAY ALIMONY.

Wife Charges Abandonment-Gets $10 a Week for a Year.

Herbert T. Beatty, who says he is a promoter nirty-one years old, living at the Rossmore Hotel son of John C. Beatty, was examined before Magistrate Wahle in the Jefferson Market Police Court resterday afternoon on a charge of non-support and abandonment, brought by Nellie C. Beatty, wife of the defendant, who lives at No. 254 West 25th-st., n the Gotham Apartments. The examination reed in the court ordering Beatty to pay his wife $10 weekly and give a one year bond to insure the payments for that period.

The examination brought out interesting details. The wife, it is alleged, is nearly old enough to be the mother of Beatty, with a son almost the same age as the defendant. At the close of the same age as the defendant. At the close of the case Beatty was paroled in the custody of Asa Bird Gardiner, his counsel, to give ball to-day.

"It was in the spring of 1903," Mrs. Beatty said. "that my husband came home, and after a quarrel told me that though he loved me he loved another woman better, but if I would be patient with him it might come around all right. Shortly after that he went West, and although he sent me some money for a while, finally the payments stopped completely."

money for a white, many more made completely."

Mrs. Beasty said an arrangement had been made for her to receive $150 a month, with an extra $1,000 each year, for her support and the maintenance of her two daughters. Mrs. Beasty has four children. An effort was made by Mr. Gapdiner to have the case thrown out of court on the matter of jurisdiction. Mr, Gardiner said a suit brought by Mr. Beatty was still pending in Du Bols, Penn. This suit, he said, was for annulment of marriage and divorce on statutory grounds. Magistrate Wahle said the case was within his jurisdiction and he would continue it. heavily in a Boston venture last year. Mr. Hamil-ton, counsel for the wife, tried to show that Beatty had spent more than $97 for one week's hotel bill in a Philadelphia hotel.

in a Philadelphia hotel.

'I shall order the defendant to pay $10 a week to this plaintiff, and give a bond of $520 to insure the payment thereof, the magistrate said.

Mr. Gardiner accepted the parole and said he would have a bond in court this morning.

Remarkable Prediction Made in 1890 by Count Witte's Former Chief.

Count Witte, president of the Russian Council of Ministers and chief of the Czar's peace commisslon, was a pupil, a protégé and a favorite of his immediate predecessor in the office of Minister Finance, M. Vishnegradski, who was one of the finest, most honest and enlightened of the Muscovite statesmen of the nineteenth century. In the year 1890 he prepared for the late Czar a confidential memorandum, which, in view of recent events and present circumstances, seems so prophetic that it is worthy of being placed on record here. He oresaw the internal troubles which are now convulsing Russia and the "development of a reprentative system of control." The memorandum

But reform will come from without, rather than within, the empire, and we shall not know it is here until some foreign power-England, perhaps, but more likely Engiand in coalition with some Eastern power-is knocking at our gates. The danger must at all events come from the East. For in Europe we are too solid and centralized to be attacked successfully. It behooves us, therefore, to do all we can to prepare and develop our Aslatic dominions, and to seek no other territories until in 1820] quite invulnerable.

It is amazing how this prediction has been fulfilled, and had the sagacious advice of this eminent statesman been followed Russia would have been spared many, if not all, of the disasters by which she has been overtaken.

PATHETIC CLOSE OF HIS CAREER.

There are few things more tragic and pathetic han the close of the career of this entirely selfmade man, who began life as the son of a humble and imporerished village priest, was educated at a free seminary, and became mathematical master at the Russian Pedagogues' Institute. His first appearance in public life was as one of the me pergetic organizers of the Moscow Exhibition, and he entered the public service only after he had pade a private fortune of several million rubles by allroad speculation.

It appears that some time before the period of from the result of overwork, which culninated in dementia and speedy death, the homely little man had become aware of the fact that h was threatened with cerebral anæmia, and had in onsequence engaged the services of a specialist. who accompanied him everywhere. On the day on which he broke down the physician perceived, dur ing the railroad trip from St. Petersburg to Cathina, that there was some incoherence in the remarks of the Minister. Accordingly, on reaching the imperial antechamber, he quietly requeste chamberlain in attendance to warn Emperor Alexander of the stateman's condition. When therefore, the Minister entered the audience chamber, the monarch arose from his chair, advanced meet him, holding out both hands to him, and exclaiming in the most cheery and affectionate tone, "Good morning, my dear Yvan, let us post one business until to-morrow, and, instead o orking, stay and take breakfast with me."

Reason, however, had manifestly fled at that oment from the once so brilliant mind of the eminent Minister. For, without appearing to see or hear the Czar, he commenced to bow pro foundly to the latter's vacant chair, murmuring unintelligible phrases. Thereupon, taking up his position as usual, before the imperial desk, he began to read his official report, addressing himself to the still vacant chair of the Czar, and at the end of every sentence stopping to give an English translation thereof. It is scarcely necessary to say that Alexander was profoundly moved by this pitiable spectacle. Bringing up a chair to the desk, he gently forced the Minister into it, and then summoned the physician from the antecham ber. When he returned with the medical man h found Wychnegradski fast asleep, with his head resting on the imperial desk. He never recovered shortly afterward.

PATRIARCH OF ENGLAND'S PEERAGE

Lord Leicester, the patriarch of the English peerage, lies dying at Holkham, his ancestral home in Norfolkshire, and the chances of his recovery are but slight. He was born considerably more than four score years ago of a father who was seventy years of age at the time, and had been born as far back as the reign of King George II, seventeen years before either the first Napoleon or the great Duke of Wellington came into the world. The youngest of old Lord Leicester's eighteen children was born eleven years ago when his father was seventy-one, and at the time of the little fellow's birth, no less than 141 years divided him from the birth of his paternal grandfather, Thomas William Coke, the first of the Holkham Earls of Leicester of the present crea-

Lord Leicester's eldest son and heir, who will succeed to the earldom and to the possession of the famous Holkham Hall estates, has been known until now as Viscount Coke, and as an officer of the Scots Guards has seen a good deal of active ser vice in Egypt, in the Souden and in South Africa He is snarried to a charming Irish woman, Alice White, daughter of Lord Annaly, and has three grown-up sons and a couple of daughters. In spite of this their mother is still a wonderfully young looking woman, with a tall, graceful figure, typically Irish eyes and ruddy brown hair. She ciety, and excels as a skater, having won all sorts of trophies on the ice.

Although the Leicester peerage is of modern creation, having been granted in the first year of the reign of Queen Victoria, yet the Coke family is an ancient one, Sir Edward Coke having been Lord Chief Justice of England under Queen Elizabeth and King James I. The great-great-grandson of this Lord Chief Justice, Sir Thomas Coke, was Postmaster General in the reign of King George II. and was created Viscount Coke of Holkham and Earl of Leicester. Dying without issue, Holkham passed into the possession of his sister's son, Wen-man Roberts, who assumed the surname and arms of his uncle. It was his eldest son who, for the greater part of his life, was known from one end f England to the other as "Mr. Coke of Holkham." who at the age of ninety was created, by Quee Victoria, Earl of Leicester and Viscount Coke-

HOLKHAM HALL, IN NORFOLK.

Holkhan, which comprises over 50,000 acres, is one of the most beautiful places in Norfolkshire, situated in that part of the county which is the nearest spot on the English shores to Denmark which has often led Lord Leicester to insist that King Christian was his next door neighbor. The hall is a massive building, built something over 200 years ago, and of very stately proportions. The entrance hall, some seventy feet long by fifty feet wide, is of variegated alabaster, of tones at once cool and rich. The settees and chairs with which the hall is partly furnished light its cold splendor floor is thickly strewn with relics of the chase in the shape of skins of bear, boar and deer. A broad crimson carpeted stair leads to a gallery, which extends round three sides of the hall, from whose On to this gallery open the doors of the various Holbein Van Dyck, Titian, Raphael, Rubens, Reynolds, Rosa and Gainshorough are all represented on the walls, while among the treasures contained in the library is a first edition copy of the "Novum Organum. presented by its author, the great Sir Francis Bacon, to his rival, Chief Justice Coke; an illuminated manuscript of the "Divina Commedia" of the fourteenth century, which belonged to Dante himself; a Cicero of the ninth century from the Abbey of Cluny, which was used by Abelard; the original manuscript of Leonardo da Vinci's book on hydraulics, written in a delicate hand, "alla ancina"-that is, backward, so that it can only mancina"—that is, backward, so that it can only be read by holding it to a mirror; and a manuscript Livy, presented by Cosmo di Medici to Alfonso of Naples, the leaves of which are reported to be impregnated with a subtle and deadly poison. I may add that on the title page of Bacon's presentation copy of his "Novum Organum" Chief Justice Coke, the recipient, has written the following presents comment: caustic comment:

"Deserveth not to be read in schooles, But to be freighted in the shippe of fooles."

There is also in the library a beautiful reliquary of beaten gold, ornamented with precious stones, and alleged by its oldtime monkish possessors to and alleged by its obtains hones of St. Thomas, St. James, St. Paul. # WHY THE DUKE WAS ARRESTED.

The Duc de Lorge, who represented the Duke of Orleans, the other day at the obsequies of the latter's father-in-law, Archduke Joseph, in Hungary, is willing to undertake missions of this kind in behalf of the Pretender anywhere on the Continent of Europe, but balks at England, a country against which he has always retained a grudge since an episode which occurred a number of years ago. It was on the occasion of one of his periodical visits father, the late Comte de Paris, in England. Anyhow, somewhat bored by the whole affair, he found himself one evening after dinner in London with time hanging heavy on his hands. Not knowing where to go, he remembered that he had heard the Cremorne spoken of as a garden that possessed some analogy with the Moulin Rouge at Paris, summoned a cab of the fourwheel type and instructed the driver to take him to Cremorne. Now, Cremorne is a thing of the past in London, having been abolished twenty or thirty years ago. onsequently the cabman drove the duke about hither and thither for a couple of hours, without having the faintest idea of the destination to which his fare wanted to go. Finally the duke alighted, and so did the cabman, and the duke, who did not know a word of English, endeavored once more to explain matters to the driver, who could not talk a word of French.

At length the duke, in utter desperation and with the object of demonstrating to the cabman the character of the place to which he wanted to go, he gan dancing the most amazing can-can on the pavement. The duke was assisted to alight by three strapping policemen, and after having been put in a straitjacket was placed n a cell, nor was it until the following morning, when the police surgeon, who happily knew some words of French, made his rounds, that the duke was able to recover his liberty and to turn his back forever upon England.

The archæological department of the Metropolitan Museum of Art will soon be enriched by a bronze statue of Caius Vibius Trebonianus Gallus, one of the Roman emperors. George H. Story, acting director of the museum, said last evening that this statue, the only one ever discovered of the emperor, was recently bought by the trustees of the museum in Paris. It will shortly be placed on exhibition in a gallery near the Boscoreale frescos from the house of Publius Fannius Synistor and the Greco-Etruscan Biga from Monteleone di Spoleto.

Trebonianus Gallus lived in the second and third century, A. D. His reign was characterized as "one of the most calamiteus as well as the most disgraceful recorded in the annals of the empire." The Pretorians killed him for his cowardice in the wars against the Goths.

The statue, which is 7 feet 11 inches in neight, stands nude, except for a short mantle falling from the left shoulder over the back and held up by the left arm. The right leg is straight and firmly supports the body, while the left is bent slightly forward. The right arm is extended above the head, and the right hand, with forefinger raised, appears to emphasize speech. The feet are protected by sandals.

The modelling of the statue is said to be of its conception and execution a certain affinity to the "Augustus Cæsar" found in the Gallinas Villa and to the "Young Athlete" discovered between the first and second foundation walls of the Temple of the Sun, in Rome, February 7, 1885. realistic boldness and beauty, and to have in
